SONG OF MIONOSEKI.

[Seki is a goodly place, facing the morning sun. There, from the holy mountains, the winds blow softly, softly, — soyo-soyoto.]

PUBLISHERS' NOTE

SCATTERED through the pages of Lafcadio Hearn's writings are many Japanese lyrics. So graceful are these little poems, so characteristic, in their swift, sure impressionism, of Oriental art, that it has seemed worth while to bring them together within the compass of a single volume.

It is perhaps unnecessary to analyze here the distinctive features of Japanese poetry. The reader will understand that as the poets relied for their effect largely upon the opportunities for subtle and intricate double meanings afforded by the peculiar structure of the Japanese language, it is scarcely possible to do them justice in an alien tongue. But these translations, though faithful to the original, have the innate feeling for beauty, the instinctive sense of the right word, the perfect phrase, common to everything that came from Hearn's pen.

To preserve the volume from the appearance of undue weightiness the interpretive notes with which the poems are accompanied have been reduced to the smallest possible compass. Indeed, in many cases the elaborate plays upon words are too involved to be susceptible of explanation.

In their limitation of a poem to the presentation of a single impression and in their ability to present that impression with the utmost vividness and with the sternest economy of words, these Japanese poets are strangely akin to the Imagists, the youngest of the modern schools. And for this reason it has seemed peculiarly appropriate that their work should be included in the NEW POETRY SERIES.

Like a woman slipping off her haori¹ — that is the appearance of a butterfly.

Ah, the butterfly keeps getting in the way of the bird-catcher's pole !

Perched upon the temple-bell, the butterfly sleeps :

Even while sleeping, its dream is of play — ah, the butterfly of the grass !

Wake up ! wake up ! — I will make thee my comrade, thou sleeping butterfly.

Ah, the sad expression in the eyes of that caged bird ! — envying the butterfly !

Even though it did not appear to be a windy day, the fluttering of the butterflies — !

INSECT POEMS

When I saw the fallen flower return to the branch— lo ! it was only a butterfly !²

How the butterfly strives to compete in lightness with the falling flowers !

See that butterfly on the woman's path, — now fluttering behind her, now before !

Ha ! the butterfly ! — it is following the person who stole the flowers !

Poor autumn butterfly ! — when left without a comrade, it follows after man !

Ah, the butterfly ! Even when chased, it never has the air of being in a hurry.

As for butterflies, they all have the appearance of being about seventeen or eighteen years old.³

INSECT POEMS

How the butterfly sports, — just as if there were no enmity in this world!

Ah, the butterfly! — it sports about as if it had nothing more to desire in this present state of existence.

Having found it difficult indeed to perch upon the (foam-) blossoms of the waves, — alas for the butterfly!

If (in our next existence) we be reborn as butterflies upon the moor, then perchance we may be happy together!

*On the pink-flower there is a white butterfly:
whose spirit, I wonder?*

The one-day wife has at last appeared — a pair of butterflies!

Approaching they dance; but when the two meet at last they are very quiet, the butterflies!

INSECT POEMS

Would that I might always have the desire of chasing butterflies!

*Now the poor creature has nowhere to go! . . .
Alas for the dwellings of the ants in this rain of the fifth month!*

A solitary voice! Did the Moon cry? 'T was but the hototogisu.⁴

When I gaze towards the place where I heard the hototogisu cry, lo! there is naught save the wan morning moon.

Save only the morning moon, none heard the heart's-blood cry of the hototogisu.

Sleep, baby, sleep! Why are the honorable ears of the Child of the Hare of the honorable mountain so long? 'T is because when he dwelt within her honored womb, his mamma ate the leaves of the loquat, the leaves of the bamboo-grass. That is why his honorable ears are so long.

LULLABIES AND CHILDREN'S VERSE

Kite, kite, let me see you dance, and to-morrow evening, when the crows do not know, I will give you a rat.

O tardy crow, hasten forward! Your house is all on fire. Hurry to throw water upon it. If there be no water, I will give you. If you have too much, give it to your child. If you have no child, then give it back to me.

Come, firefly, I will give you water to drink. The water of that place is bitter; the water here is sweet.

Butterfly, little butterfly, light upon the na leaf. But if thou dost not like the na leaf, light, I pray thee, upon my hand.

Snail, snail, put out your horns a little: it rains and the wind is blowing, so put out your horns, just for a little while.

Lovers find chance to murmur prayers never meant for the dead !'*

*He who was never bewitched by the charming smile of a woman,
A wooden Buddha is he — a Buddha of bronze or stone !*

*Thinking to-morrow remains, thou heart's frail flower-of-cherry ?
How knowest whether this night the tempest will not come ?*

*All things change, we are told, in this world of change and sorrow ;
But love's way never changes of promising never to change.*

LOVE SONGS AND LYRICS

Father and mother forbade, and so I gave up my lover; —

Yet still, with the whirl of the Wheel,⁸ the thought of him comes and goes.

Numberless insects there are that call from dawn to evening,

Crying, “I love! I love!” — but the Firefly’s silent passion,

Making its body burn, is deeper than all their longing.

Even such is my love . . . yet I cannot think through what ingwa⁹

I opened my heart — alas! — to a being not sincere!

To wish to be forgotten by the beloved is a soul-task harder far than trying not to forget.

At the coming of twilight I invited him to return with me —! Now to sleep alone in the shadow of the rushes of Akanuma — ah! what misery unspeakable!”¹⁰

LOVE SONGS AND LYRICS

Closely, closely the youthful prince now follows after the gem-bright maid ; —

The tears of the fair one, falling, have moistened all her robes.

But the august lord, having once become enamored of her — the depth of his longing is like the depth of the sea.

Therefore it is only I that am left forlorn, — only I that am left to wander alone.

Being on my way to pay a visit, I found that which I took to be a flower : therefore here I spend the day. . . . Why, in the time before dawn, the dawn-blush tint should glow — that, indeed, I know not. ¹¹

If with my sleeve I hide the faint fair color of the dawning sun, — then, perhaps, in the morning my lord will remain.

Dear, shouldst thou die, grave shall hold thee never !

I thy body's ashes, mixed with wine, will drink.

GOBLIN POETRY

Yearning after her far-journeying husband, the woman has thus become two bodies, by reason of her ghostly sickness.

Though (it was said that), because of her ghostly sickness, there was not even a shadow of her left to be seen, — yet, contrary to expectation, there are two shadows of her to be seen !

Afflicted with the Rikomyō, she hides away from people in the back room, and never approaches the front of the house, — because of her Shadow-disease.

Here her body lies but her soul is far away, asleep in the arms of a man; — and the white-haired mother, little knowing her daughter's heart, is nursing (only the body).

If, when seated before her toilet-stand, she sees two faces reflected in her mirror, — that might be caused by the mirror doubling itself under the influence of the Shadow-Sickness.¹⁵

The eye of it, widely open, like a (round) mirror; the mouth of it opening like a wash-basin — by these things you may know that the Toad is a toilet article.¹⁶

When the hamaguri¹⁷ opens its mouth — lo! Shinkirō appears! . . . Then all can clearly see the Maiden-Princess of the Dragon-Palace.

Lo! in the offing at ebb-tide, the hamaguri makes visible the miniature image of Shinkirō — the Dragon-Capital!

Will not the Rokuro-Kubi, viewing with astonishment¹⁹ her own body (left behind) cry out, "Oh, what a headless goblin have you become!"

Swiftly gliding along the roof-beam, the Rokuro-Kubi laughs with the sound of "kêta-kêta" — oh! the fearfulness of her face!

Beholding the Rokuro-Kubi rise up above the six-foot screen, any five-foot person would have become shortened by fear.

As for the Snow-Woman,²⁰ — even her best comb, if I mistake not, is made of thick ice; and her hair-pin, too, is probably made of ice.

Was she, then, a delusion from the very first, that Snow-Woman, — a thing that vanishes into empty space? When I look carefully all about me, not one trace of her is to be seen!

Having vanished at daybreak (that Snow-Woman), none could say whither she had gone. But what had seemed to be a snow-white woman became indeed a willow-tree!

Though the Snow-Woman appears to sight slender and gentle, yet, to snap the pine-trees asunder and to crush the live bamboos, she must have had strength.

Having perished in the sea, (those Hēiké) would probably have become food for fishes. (Anyhow, whenever) the ship-following ghosts (appear), the wind has a smell of raw fish!

Marshaled (on the beach) at the ebb of the tide, the Hēiké-crabs²⁷ obliquely glare at the apparition of this miserable world.

Though (the Hēiké) long ago sank and perished in the Western Sea, the Hēiké-crabs still display upon their upper shells the color of the Red Standard.

Because of the pain of defeat, claws have grown on their breasts, I think; — even the faces of the Hēiké-crabs have become crimson (with anger and shame).

Even the live tree set in the alcove has fallen down; and the mountains in the hanging picture tremble to the quaking made by the Yanari! ²⁸

Who set the house-pillar upside-down? Surely that must have been the work of a man with a knot in his heart. ²⁹

O Ears that be in the wall! ³² listen, will ye? to the groaning and the creaking of the house-post that was planted upside-down!

When I inquired for the master of the house that was for sale, there came to me only a strange sound by way of reply, — the sound of the upside-down house-post opening its eyes and mouth! (i.e. its knots and cracks.)

Who could have thought it! — even the poem inscribed upon the pillar-tablet, attached to the pillar which was planted upside-down, has taken the same (ghostly) sickness.³³

When even the grass and the trees are sleeping under the faint wind of the night, — then do the eyes and the noses (or “the buds and the flowers”) of the old tsubaki-tree move!

As for (the reason why) the light of that lamp appears to be a Weirdness, — perhaps the oil was expressed from (the nuts of) the ancient tsubaki?³⁹

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

JAPANESE LYRICS .

The following group of poems are all from the Manyōshū, or "Gathering of a Myriad Leaves," a vast collection of poems composed before the middle of the eighth century. They represent the old classic poetry at its purest, free from alien influence; and they offer us many suggestions as to the condition of Japanese life and thought twelve hundred years ago. The legend to which they refer is as follows:—

The great god of the firmament had a lovely daughter, Tanabata-tsumé, who passed her days in weaving garments for her august parent. She rejoiced in her work, and thought that there was no greater pleasure than the pleasure of weaving. But one day, as she sat before her loom at the door of her heavenly dwelling, she saw a handsome peasant lad pass by, leading an ox, and she fell in love with him. Her august father, divining her secret wish, gave her the youth for a husband. But the wedded lovers became too fond of each other, and neglected their duty to the god of the firmament; the sound of the shuttle was no longer heard, and the ox wandered, unheeded, over the plains of heaven. Therefore the great god was displeased, and he separated the pair. They were sentenced to live thereafter apart, with the Celestial River⁴⁰ between them; but it was permitted them to see each other once a year, on the seventh night of the seventh moon. On that night—providing the skies be clear—the birds of heaven make, with their bodies and wings, a bridge over the stream; and by means of that bridge the lovers can meet. But if there be rain, the River of Heaven rises, and becomes so wide that the bridge cannot be formed. So the husband and wife cannot always meet, even on the seventh night of the seventh month; it may happen, by reason of bad weather, that they cannot meet for three or four years at a time. But their love remains immortally young and eternally patient; and they continue to fulfil their respective duties each day without fault,—happy in their hope of being able to meet on the seventh night of the next seventh month.

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

*He is coming, my long-desired lord, whom I have been waiting to meet here, on the banks of the River of Heaven. . . . The moment of loosening my girdle is nigh!*⁴¹

Over the Rapids of the Everlasting Heaven, floating in his boat, my lord will doubtless deign to come to me this very night.

Though winds and clouds to either bank may freely come or go, between myself and my far-away spouse no message whatever may pass.

To the opposite bank one might easily fling a pebble; yet, being separated from him by the River of Heaven, alas! to hope for a meeting (except in autumn) is utterly useless.

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

From the day that the autumn wind began to blow (I kept saying to myself), “Ah! when shall we meet?” — but now my beloved, for whom I waited and longed, has come indeed!

Though the waters of the River of Heaven have not greatly risen, (yet to cross) this near stream and to wait upon (my lord and lover) remains impossible.

Though she is so near that the waving of her (long) sleeves can be distinctly seen, yet there is no way to cross the stream before the season of autumn.

When we were separated, I had seen her for a moment only,—and dimly as one sees a flying midge; now I must vainly long for her as before, until time of our next meeting!

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

Methinks that Hikoboshi must be rowing his boat to meet his wife,—for a mist (as of oar-spray) is rising over the course of the Heavenly Stream.

While awaiting my lord on the misty shore of the River of Heaven, the skirts of my robe have somehow become wet.

On the River of Heaven, at the place of the august ferry, the sound of the water has become loud: perhaps my long-awaited lord will soon be coming in his boat.

As Tanabata (slumbers) with her long sleeves rolled up, until the reddening of the dawn, do not, O storks of the river-shallows, awaken her by your cries.

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

(She sees that) a mist is spreading across the River of Heaven. . . . "To-day, to-day," she thinks, "my long-awaited lord will probably come over in his boat."

By the ferry of Yasu, on the River of Heaven, the boat is floating: I pray you tell my beloved that I stand here and wait.

Though I (being a Star-god) can pass freely to and fro, through the great sky, — yet to cross over the River of Heaven, for your sake, was weary work indeed!

From the august Age of the God-of-Eight-Thousand-Spears, she had been my spouse in secret only; yet now, because of my constant longing for her, our relation has become known to men.

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

From the time when heaven and earth were parted, she has been my own wife ; — yet, to be with her, I must always wait till autumn.

With my beloved, of the ruddy-tinted cheeks, this night indeed will I descend into the bed of the River of Heaven, to sleep on a pillow of stone.

When I see the water-grasses of the River of Heaven bend in the autumn wind (I think to myself) : “ The time (for our meeting) seems to have come.”

When I feel in my heart a sudden longing for my husband, then on the River of Heaven the sound of the rowing of the night-boat is heard, and the plash of the oar resounds.

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

In the night when I am reposing with my (now) far-away spouse, having exchanged jewel-pillows⁴² with her, let not the cock crow, even though the day should dawn.

Though for a myriad ages we should remain hand-in-hand and face to face, our exceeding love could never come to an end. (Why then should Heaven deem it necessary to part us?)

The white cloth which Tanabata has woven for my sake, in that dwelling of hers, is now, I think, being made into a robe for me.

Though she be far-away, and hidden from me by five hundred layers of white cloud, still shall I turn my gaze each night toward the dwelling-place of my younger sister (wife).

THE RIVER OF HEAVEN

When autumn comes, and the river-mists spread over the Heavenly Stream, I turn toward the river (and long); and the nights of my longing are many!

But once in the whole year, and only upon the seventh night (of the seventh month), to meet the beloved person—and lo! The day has dawned before our mutual love could express (or “satisfy”) itself!

The love-longing of one whole year having ended to-night, every day from to-morrow I must again pine for him as before!

Hikoboshi and Tanabata-tsumé are to meet each other to-night;—ye waves of the River of Heaven, take heed that ye do not rise!

Oh! that white cloud driven by the autumn-wind — can it be the heavenly hiré⁴³ of Tanabata-tsumé?

Because he is my not-often-to-be-met beloved, hasten to row the boat across the River of Heaven ere the night be advanced.

Late in the night, a mist spreads over the River of Heaven; and the sound of the oar of Hikoboshi is heard.

On the River of Heaven a sound of plashing can be distinctly heard: is it the sound of the rippling made by Hikoboshi quickly rowing his boat?

JAPANESE LYRICS

Perhaps the legend of Tanabata, as it was understood by those old poets, can make but a faint appeal to Western minds. Nevertheless, in the silence of transparent nights, before the rising of the moon, the charm of the ancient tales sometimes descends upon me, out of the scintillant sky,—to make me forget the monstrous facts of science, and the stupendous horror of Space. Then I no longer behold the Milky Way as that awful Ring of the Cosmos, whose hundred million suns are powerless to lighten the Abyss, but as the very Amanogawa itself,—the River Celestial. I see the thrill of its shining stream, and the mists that hover along its verge, and the water-grasses that bend in the winds of autumn. White Orihimé I see at her starry loom, and the Ox that grazes on the farther shore;—and I know that the falling dew is the spray from the Herdsman's oar. And the heaven seems very near and warm and human; and the silence about me is filled with the dream of a love unchanging, immortal,—forever yearning and forever young, and forever left unsatisfied by the paternal wisdom of the gods.

NOTES

NOTES

1. A cloak, lined usually with brightly colored silk.
2. Alluding to the Buddhist proverb: "The fallen flower returns not to the branch; the broken mirror never again reflects."
3. That is to say, the grace of their motion makes one think of the grace of young girls.
4. A creature of which weird things are told; for it is said to be a night wanderer from the Land of Darkness. It cries as though in pain the syllables "ho-to-to-gi-su."
5. Because an obi or girdle of very bright color can be worn only by children.
6. Written more than eleven hundred years ago on the death of the poet's little son.
7. Literally: "Repeat prayers saying, dead-of-presence-in twain facing, — small-pan cooking!" Konabé-daté is an idiomatic expression signifying a lovers' tête-à-tête, the idea suggested being that of the pleasure experienced by an amorous couple in eating out of the same dish.
8. The Wheel of Karma, the passage from birth to birth.
9. Deeds in a former existence.
10. A double meaning in the third line of the original may be rendered by reading for of Akanuma — after the time of that happy relation.
11. The meaning intended may be expressed thus: "Being on my way to pay a visit, I met with a being lovely as a flower; and for the sake of that lovely person, I am passing the day here.

. . . Fair one, wherefore that dawn-like blush before the hour of dawn? — can it mean that you love me?”

12. The Will-o'-the-Wisp is called fox-fire because the goblin-fox was supposed to create it.
13. The goblin-fox deceived men by transforming an old horse-bone into the form of a courtesan.
14. One afflicted with ghost-sickness. It was formerly supposed that the intense grief or longing of a lover caused the suffering spirit to create a double, one body going to join the beloved while the other remained at home.
15. This suggests the ghostly sympathy said to exist between a mirror and the soul of its possessor.
16. A typical play upon words. The toad was credited with supernatural powers and the phrase keshō-no-mono may signify goblin-thing as well as toilet article.
17. A mollusk credited with the power of creating a mirage by exhaling a vapor that to deluded mortals takes the form of Shin-kirō, the Elf-land of Far Eastern fable.
18. A person whose neck lengthens prodigiously during sleep, so that the head can wander around seeking what it may devour. Often the head is completely detachable.
19. A woman may become a Rokuro-Kubi without knowing it.
20. A beautiful phantom whose embrace is death.
21. The original is capable of another reading suggesting that the grace of her form is like that of willow branches weighed down by snow.
22. The spirits of the drowned are said to follow after ships calling for a dipper. This should be given, but first, without the knowledge of the spirits, the bottom must be knocked out, otherwise they will use it to fill and sink the ship.

23. The Underworld of the Dead.
24. A famous chieftain of the Hēiké clan lost in a great sea-fight. His ghost was addicted to making off with the anchors of ships moored in his domain.
25. Spirits of the drowned must remain in the water until they can lure the living to destruction. So his exclamation really means, "now perchance I shall be able to achieve salvation by drowning somebody."
26. Or "the avenging ghost."
27. A species bearing on their upper shells wrinklins resembling the outlines of an angry face. They are said to be the transformed spirits of the defeated Hēiké warriors.
28. A goblin who makes a practice of shaking houses. It may also mean the sound of the shaking of a house during an earthquake.
29. A house-post must be set with the same end up as when it was growing. An "upside-down post" would groan in the night, open its cracks like mouths and its knots like eyes, and make itself generally a nuisance until the mistake was corrected.
30. Or, "for what evil design can this deed have been done"? Takumi may signify either a carpenter or an intrigue.
31. Literally, "upside-down-matter-sorrow," contrariety.
32. Alluding to the proverb, "There are ears in the wall," suggesting the necessity for care even in private conversation.
33. That is, is upside-down — all wrong.
34. Some statues of Jizō, the Buddhist savior of children's ghosts, are said to walk at night in various disguises.

NOTES

35. The bald body and staring eyes of the cuttlefish, bearing a distorted resemblance to the shaven head of a priest, suggested to the Japanese the name Priest of the Sea.
36. Japanese houses are protected against the entrance of evil spirits by charms written on rice paper and pasted on the door.
37. Or, repeating, "Hail to thee, O Buddha Amitâbha!" The idea of counting is also suggested in this alternate reading by the fact that the invocation to Amitâbha is usually accompanied by the numbering of beads on a rosary.
38. This tree, which in its old age is supposed to be a favorite haunt of goblins, bears a heavy crimson flower that drops with an audible thud often compared with the sound of a human head falling under the sword.
39. The oil used in Japanese lamps was obtained from the nuts of the tsubaki.
40. The Milky Way.
41. Lovers, ere parting, were wont to tie each other's inner girdle (bimo) and pledge themselves to leave the knot untouched until the time of their next meeting.
42. A poetical phrase signifying the use of each other's arms as pillows.
43. Scarf.
